SPECIAL	- Fra'al utilize a complex targeting matrix that greatly improves the accuracy of their weapon batteries at long range; they treat all targets less than 30 cm as closing and do not suffer a column shift for firing at targets greater than 30 cm. - The Fra'al will not ally themselves with fleets that include loyal Imperial Navy or Space Marine vessels.
	OPTIONS The Fra'al Raider has a Xenotech: Targeting Matrix, see the special ability above.

Ordo Xenos Dossier: The Fra'al

Unlike a great many minor alien races that plagued Mankind throughout the galaxy during the Dark Age of Technology until purged during the Emperor's Great Crusade to liberate Mankind, the Fra'al managed to avoid the Emperor's attention and remain in relative obscurity. Some have speculated that their system's proximity to the Eye of Terror is the primary reason for this. It is unknown exactly where their system or small cluster of systems are located, the only fact that stays them from the Emperor's wrath. While many of the Ordo Xenos and Ordo Biologis have debated where they may originate from, the fact that they tend to cluster their raids in the Artemis, Tamahl and surrounding sectors bordering the eastern quadrant of the Eye Of Terror suggests that they must originate from somewhere nearby. Rumours persist however that occasional Fra'al sightings have occurred as far away as the Northern Rim and along the border of Segmentum Ultima, though these have not been adequately substantiated.

Precious little is known of this Xenos race, as every single contact with Imperial elements, regardless of how benign, has resulted in combat until one side or the other was destroyed or forced to withdraw. Believed to be warp-worshippers like the Xenarch, every fact gleaned on this violently reclusive race was gained by extensive analysis of the blasted hull of one of their exceedingly rare capital ships identified in their guttural dialect as the Sharak-Fraka, hulked by the Divine Right during the battle of Fraga'Tral in 312.M39. Analysis revealed little in the way of technology that surpasses comparable Imperial designs, though rumours persist that the Adeptus Mechanicus was not entirely forthcoming with the results of their examination.

One remarkable trait is their seeming attraction to wildly asymmetric designs and configurations. Even their largest starships bear no symmetry along any axis, constructed utilizing a bizarre series of intricate patterns maddening to behold by even the most stoic of veteran starship crews. It has been speculated that these unusual shapes are somehow attuned to the warp, which has been postulated as an explanation for how they can so easily slip away from pursuers even in the midst of a heated engagement. This foul Xenos has been declared Horrificus Abomini by the Ordo Xenos, and it is only a matter of time before it meets its end like the Yu'vath, righteously exterminated during the Angevin Crusade in M39.
